

STEWART CINK (-12)

Q. Another great finish. What has been the key to this resurgence, because you're playing so good right now?

STEWART CINK: It's been a couple of factors. Reagan caddying for me, my son, we have great chemistry. You know, half his DNA is mine and we just see things the same way on the golf course and we have really good communication out there on our shots. It makes me be really decisive and committed. That certainly helps when you're searching for ways to separate you from the competition out here where everybody is so good. Those little things really, really matter, so that's been a big factor.

Then I made an equipment change right before Safeway that has paid off, too. I kind of lowered my spin rates through my whole bag, driver all the way down through my irons, and when we came here and we had the crazy winds there for a couple days, I think I was able to keep my ball sort of like mildly, you know, less out of control than maybe I would have before.

Q. Stewart, now looks like you're projected as No. 1 in FedExCup points heading to Houston next week. That's important, that's what you guys are playing for. Now, what does that mean to you right now being No. 1?

STEWART CINK: Well, I mean, it's early. There's a lot of golf tournaments coming up and there's a lot of golf tournaments coming up that I'm not going to be in, for instance, the Masters. So it's early, but it's nice to know that the tournaments I've played in this year have yielded a lot of points. Just to be looking at that list and seeing my name, it just continues to give me confidence over and over knowing that I'm doing the right things on the golf course and I just don't plan to change anything.

Q. So we'll see you in Houston and RSM?

STEWART CINK: That's correct, yeah.
